BP VII f.61.2

Fragment of a papyrus scroll with several lines of ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs. The text is written in black ink on a light-colored, fibrous material. The fragment is heavily damaged, with many lines of text obscured by a dense network of horizontal and vertical scratches and tears. The visible hieroglyphs are arranged in approximately five horizontal lines, though the lower portions are significantly obscured by the damage. The fragment is set against a dark, textured background.
